34- O. R., Series I, XXXIII, 95.

35- Ibid. The entire plan depended upon good timing and close cooperation between Hoke, Barton, Clingham, Dearing, and 36- John Taylor Wood.

36- Ibid., ~~92, 97-98~~<sup>93</sup>. At this time Barton was 15 miles from Kinston. Jimmy Dearing's Cavalry Brigade was advancing according to schedule; General James G. Martin was marching from Wilmington towards Morehead City; Colonel John Taylor Wood, with the naval contingent, was proceeding in rowboats, down the Neuse River to New Bern.

37- Ibid., 93.

38- Ibid. Wood's objective was to "secure" the Union gun-boats which were stationed in the Neuse River immediately above New Bern. This accomplished, Weed-Picket, "with the party under my command," would attempt to draw off the Unionists, and possibly enter the town.

39- Ibid., 93, 95-96.

40- Ibid., 93, 95-96. Batchelder's Creek is a deep and narrow stream between Tuscarora Station and New Bern.

43- Ibid.

44- Ibid., 93. Also, the plan was too complicated, too many units were required to act in over-close coordination, a difficult feat across bridgeless streams and muddy roads. See Ibid., 97-99.

45- John K. Walker to Lucinda Walker, February 7, 1864, John K. Walker Letters. ~~Pickett gives the figures as 13 officers and 285 privates captured, 14 negroes, 2 rifled pieces and caissons, 300 stands of small-arms, 11 ambulances, 2 wagons, 103 captured animals, 11 quantity of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and 2 flags.~~ O. R., Series I, XXXIII, 94.
